Both hearing and deaf people use some signs to communicate. For example, babies quickly learn to point at things they want. Often people use a system of signs to communicate with others who speak different languages.

Sign languages are unique languages. People who use sign language make shapes, called signs, with their hands and arms. They also move their bodies. Deaf people use signs for letters, words, or ideas. People who use sign language can communicate their thoughts and feelings using hand movements instead of speech.

Just as there are many different spoken languages, there are also many different sign languages. Around the world there are more than 100 sign languages which are mainly used by deaf people. Most deaf people in North America and some other countries use American Sign Language (ASL). Hundreds of thousands of people communicate using this language.

Just like spoken language, people can use sign language to express all kinds of thoughts. People who use sign language can talk about actions, feelings, and ideas. One difference between sign language and spoken language is that sign language can express more than one meaning at a time.
